Growing Dollars for the Future—
Yours and Mount St. Mary’s

Is there a way to combine your concern for your future with your wish to somehow participate in the future of Mount St. Mary’s College?

The answer is YES—through a Charitable Gift Annuity.

Gift annuities are especially helpful to older persons who are looking for a safe, secure place to put their money and earn an attractive interest rate, while at the same time satisfying a desire to support the Mount through a special gift.

• In exchange for a contribution of cash or securities or other property, donors receive a lifetime of fixed payments that can be made quarterly, semianually or annually. Most gift annuities are established for one person, but they can be issued for husband and wife or other pairs of people.

• In addition to the lifetime stream of fixed payments, donors enjoy certain tax advantages: an initial tax deduction is available, and a portion of the income payments are tax-free.

• The size of the income payments depends on the size of the contribution, the donor’s age, and whether the annuity covers one or two people.

• The minimum amount to establish a charitable gift annuity at Mount St.
Mary’s is $5,000.

WHAT A GIFT ANNUITY GIVES YOU
A person who gives $10,000 to Mount St. Mary’s through a charitable gift annuity receives the following:

Invest in the Mount

As we planned our Campaign, Invest in the Mount, the College chose well in its decision to describe Mount St. Mary’s as diverse, distinct, and dynamic. We serve a student population that mirrors the rich ethnic diversity of greater Los Angeles. Proud of its distinction as the only Catholic college primarily for women in the western United States, the Mount responds to the evolving needs of students and those of the greater Los Angeles community. We offer students a superior education in a dynamic learning environment. Students continue to distinguish themselves in local and national competitions across the disciplines.

The Mount has always held the unwavering belief that every capable and motivated woman, regardless of economic or social background, should have the opportunity to pursue a college education. We have opened doors for generations of women, and now a few good men, who serve their communities as nurses, teachers, judges and attorneys, social workers, business leaders, physicians, public servants and professionals in ministry.

To maintain its premier influence, and to continue to flourish as a leading institution of higher education, Mount St. Mary’s College must acquire additional financial resources so that we can continue to carry out our worthy mission dedicated to the education of young, aspiring women. Toward this end, the College announced a $45 million comprehensive Campaign, Invest in the Mount on February 25, 2006.

At a vibrant Venetian carnavale-themed event featuring Master of Ceremonies Huell Howser, we celebrated a successful silent phase of the Campaign and rallied support for the fundraising challenges that lie ahead. That night, we paid tribute to the generosity of our alumnae and friends, and set the stage for the next three years of the Campaign. Please see our special pull-out section in the middle of this magazine for more Campaign news.

Among the remarkable donors we recognized at the gala event, we thanked The Thomas and Dorothy Leavey Foundation for an $8 million contribution—the largest grant in the College’s history. The gift will be used to revitalize the Chalon Campus as a vibrant learning community, including the renovation of the residence halls, the dining area, the bookstore, and the addition of an Internet café. We also paid tribute to the Bill Hannon Foundation and thanked the Hannon family for their longtime support and generous gift of $5 million, which will underwrite the construction of a new Doheny Campus residence hall. In this magazine, you will read about more dedicated friends of the College who are making great things possible.

Our celebration reminded us that our goal to foster beauty in our environment is not only about maintaining and enhancing buildings, but also recognizing the beauty of commitment to educational excellence that our supporters demonstrate.

MSMC shines as a leader in preparing ethical professionals strongly committed to serving others. Our students learn to believe in themselves through service to others. They are encouraged to understand themselves as leaders with responsibility to the common good and to view their professional lives as a means to serve others.

This magazine showcases two alumnae who exemplify the best of MSMC, Victoria Russell Kennedy ’68 and Maria Gutierrez Ott ’70, ’78M. These remarkable women were honored during October’s Homecoming on the Chalon Campus with Outstanding Alumna Awards for 2005 (please see page 16).

As we launch our Campaign, Invest in the Mount - Diverse, Distinct, Dynamic, we seek your support to enhance our distinguished educational programs, while continuing to provide broad access to higher education. An investment in the Mount is an investment in our students and the communities they will serve.

With heartfelt gratitude,

Jacqueline Powers Doud
President

A Journey Home
By Andrea Mazon ’04

September 2, 2005, was a day marked with the joyful expectation of a new, though long awaited beginning; a time of celebrating God’s call in my life and eagerly, though somewhat nervously, responding. Encircled in the love of God and of the family, friends, and Sisters gathered, I began the next phase of my life’s journey of discovering and ever desiring to more fully become the woman I was created to be. On that day, I entered the Congregation of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet (CSJs) as a candidate, and am living in religious community for approximately 2 years while I continue to discern God’s call and prepare for my entrance into the novitiate.

The Sisters of St. Joseph came into my life when I was a freshman and religious studies major at the Mount. Sister Mary McKay ’67 was the department chair at that time as well as being my academic advisor. Sister Darlene Kawulok was one of the first—and certainly one of the most dynamic—professors I had the blessing of taking a course from. They, along with the other Sisters I met at the College and at Carondelet Center, immediately caught the attention of my heart. I was drawn to the joy they exuded and the undeniable love they had for God and all that is of God.

Before candidacy, I experienced five grace-filled years of a growing relationship with the CSJ Congregation. I attended days of prayer and reflection, spent time at Carondelet Center with our senior Sisters, and joined in the celebrating of Jubilees. With Sisters I held vigil during executions, marched to abolish the death penalty and to end human trafficking, and prayerfully demonstrated to close the School of the Americas. Through these and so many other experiences, I came to know that I was my truest self when I was with the Community.

Life as a candidate has been infused with joys, challenges, and much transition. I marvel daily at where my journey has brought me and offer prayers of thanksgiving for the blessings of candidacy and especially for life with my local community. I am privileged to live with three amazingly spirit-filled sisters: Anne McMullen, Judy Molosky ’70, and Ines Telles. Their profound love of God and unwavering hearts for justice continually inspire me. Our daily life together—morning prayer, conversation over the dinner table—fortifies me in ways I could not have imagined.

I do not know what candidacy or life in the Congregation will bring, but I know that I am home.

Mazon graduated in 2004 with a B.A. in Religious Studies and English. She is currently serving as secretary in the Nursing Department on the Chalon Campus.
Sister Annette Bower, CSJ '59, chair of the Biological Sciences Department at MSMC for four decades, was surrounded by colleagues, friends, and former students at her retirement dinner in November.

Sister Annette, a professor at the College for 42 years, taught and mentored young women who have gone on to a variety of careers in the sciences, many of them becoming physicians and biomedical researchers.

Since she announced her retirement last year, a $30,000 Sister Annette Bower Endowed Scholarship for students in biological sciences has been established.

Maria Ocampo '98, Ph.D., a biomedical researcher in London, flew from England to honor her mentor. "She empowered me and she created a tradition of excellence," Ocampo said during a speech at the dinner. "We, her students, carry her seal with us. We are her ambassadors to the world. We were taught by Sister Annette, we were loved by her, and we will never forget her."

During the dinner, Sister Annette thanked her mentors, Sister Cecilia Louise Moore, CSJ '53, and Hallie Bundy '47. Both are deceased. Sister Cecilia Louise Moore was a former chair of the Physical Sciences Department who became the College's youngest president in 1967. Hallie Bundy was a former College professor who taught chemistry from 1960 to 1990 (see page 9).

Father Matthew Delaney, the College's former academic dean, said Sister Annette encouraged the less confident but capable. He also acknowledged Sister Annette's extraordinary gift for attaining grants and equipment.

Sister Annette's grant writing inspired programs that matched Mount students with the top minds in science around the country at research conferences, and it created programs that encouraged women to pursue advanced degrees. Under her leadership, the department grew from approximately 30 students to nearly 110 now. About 75 percent of today's Mount biology graduates go on to medical or graduate school.

"My greatest delight has come from watching these young women graduate from the Mount and go out into the world as professionals," she said. "My goal has been to infuse the perspective of women into the fields of medicine and science."

In the late 1970s, Sister Annette received a 7-year grant from the National Science Foundation to support, update, and enable women to pursue their graduate degrees. These women had dropped out of science to start their families or work but were now ready to return and go forward into graduate degree studies and further their careers.

She successfully led the Minority Access to Research Careers (MARC) program funded with millions of dollars since 1990 by grants from the National Institutes of Health General Medical Sciences division. Students' work in the program is regularly recognized at the national level, and they are exposed to prominent professors at research institutions around the country.

Sister Annette earned her Ph.D. in 1972 from the University of Arizona, Tucson, in neuroendocrinology, her master's degree in cell biology from the Catholic Creighton University in Nebraska, and her bachelor's degree in biology from the Mount.

She has devoted her own research to investigating the causes of high blood pressure and heart attacks—the No. 1 killers in the world today. Students working with Sister Annette seek to learn what chemicals in the body control the heart's release of a life-saving peptide hormone, which helps lower blood pressure.

In 2002, Sister Annette celebrated her 50-year anniversary as a Sister of St. Joseph of Carondelet. She serves as a trustee and board member of the Carondelet Health Network, and is a past trustee and board member of Carondelet High School in Concord, CA.

Mount Thanks UniHealth Foundation at Nursing Labs Dedication

The Mount hosted a dedication last fall to celebrate the expansion and extensive renovations of its nursing skills labs and classrooms with a $558,000 gift from UniHealth Foundation of Los Angeles.

The event, held on the Fritz Burns Building patio, included tours of new nursing labs on the Doheny Campus. Remodeled labs at the College’s Chalon and Doheny Campuses were completed in August with new anatomically realistic patient care simulators, the latest in nursing education technology. Each mannequin, known as a “Sim-Man,” allows students to navigate a patient’s difficult airway system, practice emergency procedures, and administer intravenous therapy through a specially designed arm. Sim-Man’s changing heart rates and blood pressure readings help indicate student accuracy.

The enhancements come as the College is beginning a three-year expansion of its four nursing programs to increase the number of students from 500 to 700. The effort will make it possible for the College to send more highly-qualified nurses into the Los Angeles health care workforce.

The existing lab at the Chalon Campus has been combined with a classroom next door to provide space for skills learning, reading, new computers, and top-notch training equipment. The Doheny Campus now has a second skills lab and more classroom space. A sliding door separates the new lab from a remodeled classroom space that includes student tables. These new configurations are set up so that students can work together more.

“It is energizing to see a total change in our skills labs, which are really the center of our programs,” Mount President Jackie Doud said. “In our new layout, more students will have an opportunity to collaborate with fellow classmates while learning in an interesting and challenging environment.”
Online Language Revolution Booming at MSMC

Mount St. Mary's College is at the forefront of a new era of online language instruction where students log in 24 hours a day to learn Spanish, French, and Japanese. Students are picking up new languages and studying the cultures of Spain, France, and Hispanic civilizations in courses designed for convenient student access. The online courses have proven increasingly popular since they began in 2004, significantly boosting overall enrollment in language classes at the College.

Although students in a variety of disciplines at MSMC do online coursework, using technology to expand students’ language proficiency is especially relevant in this age of globalization. The U.S. Senate named 2005 the “Year of Language Study.”

Working adults taking a French Culture and Civilization class in MSMC’s Weekend College enroll for the flexibility it allows them to squeeze coursework into busy lives.

“There is no alternative. We just have to do this,” said Montserrat Reguant, chair of the Language and Culture Department, who teaches several online classes. “We are living in a time of technology, and this is what works for our students. It offers fabulous flexibility.”

About 55 students enrolled in three online language and culture classes during the fall semester, plus an additional 22 in the Weekend College, Reguant said. The classes are enrolling close to 20 students each—a significant increase from the same classes enrolling students before they were offered online.

Especially popular is the Spanish for health professionals course, which was taught online in spring 2005.

Instructor Nancy Ballesteros taught elementary Spanish in fall 2005 almost exclusively online. She said good communication is essential in online teaching. “I just don’t post things and let it go,” she said. “I have to really be in contact with the students through emails, postings, and discussion boarding.”

Students in language courses log-in to their computers to hear the accent and grammar used in a professor’s lecture. Some professors, including Reguant, present a video of themselves speaking for students to access any time. Others use voice-only without video. Students take oral exams and talk to each other using headsets equipped with microphones at their computers.

MSMC’s capabilities have only begun to be explored with instructional software from Horizon Wimba, and Blackboard, the College’s main tool for online classes. The College’s technology team is working with faculty members to show them a full range of options. One such option still in development at the College is a “live classroom,” where students log-in to a class at a set time, but from any location.

MSMC also is seeking $500,000 in grant funds to enhance its online course offerings in the languages. Among other plans, the College hopes to add more online language classes, provide more training for faculty, purchase new software, and upgrade Internet wiring.

Students in the Documentary Film and Social Justice Program spent the fall semester producing MSMC’s fourth annual Human Rights Film Festival aimed at helping children in conflict around the world. Human rights advocacy played a central role in students’ work. They started a college-wide effort to stop the genocide in the Darfur area of Sudan, sending postcards to congressional leaders seeking greater accountability in the region, and petitioning President George W. Bush and Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice to develop more aggressive policies to halt violence in the region.

After a screening of “Invisible Children,” a film made by USC filmmakers about the thousands of children in Uganda who are kidnapped by rebel soldiers, taught to carry weapons and kill, MSMC students raised more than $1,200 for relief efforts in northern Uganda.

Students in the Sociology 127: Media Programming class, who produced the film festival, also produced an hour-long radio program for KPFK 90.7 FM Pacifica Radio Network in December exploring the problem of the current child soldier crisis in Uganda.

The film festival is one opportunity for students in the College’s Documentary Film and Social Justice program to learn about advocacy and human rights abuses around the world. Lecturer Pam Bruns, who teaches the class Advocacy and Human Rights, said the festival’s theme is “children in conflict.” Following film screenings, students are given opportunities to sign petitions and contact U.S. elected officials to help stop human rights abuses.

“What distinguishes the Mount St. Mary’s College film festival from others is that we always have an immediate opportunity for students to do advocacy,” said Bruns. “We don’t want them to lose the passion they feel right after they watch a film.”

In September, the festival screened “Dying to Tell the Story” about journalists covering stories in war-torn countries. Filmmaker Amy Eldon visited the Chalon Campus to discuss how she made the film in hopes of better understanding the death of her brother, Dan, in Somalia. In the film, Eldon revisits the site of her brother’s death and interviews broadcast journalist Christiane Amanpour, British broadcaster Martin Bell, and war photographer Don McCullin, among others.

D.C. Area Alums Meet with President

Remembering Hallie Bundy '47

The Mount Community was saddened by the October 2005 death of Hallie Flowers Bundy '47, a devoted alumna who became a professor of chemistry at the College and taught from 1960 to 1990.

An eighth-generation Californian, she was born in Santa Monica in 1925, the eldest of three daughters to Phyllis and Douglas Bundy. She graduated from Mount St. Mary's College with a bachelor’s degree in chemistry in 1947, and earned a secondary teaching credential in 1949.

During her undergraduate days, she was one of 21 reporters on the staff of the first student newspaper, the View, which made its debut in April 1945. Known for her spunkiness, an article in the second issue of the publication reported that twenty-five members of the Taus (Tau Alpha Zeta) sorority went to Newport Beach for a spring weekend. While others were out swimming, Bundy and a few of her friends explored the attic of the Taus abode. According to the article, Hallie Bundy sat down to rest and a loud crash and scream announced that she had fallen through the ceiling. “The explorers spent the rest of the weekend repairing the ceiling.”

She went on to earn a master’s degree in 1955 and a doctorate in 1958 in biochemistry from the University of Southern California. In 1958, she became a research associate at USC in biochemistry, a position she held until she returned to the Mount as an assistant professor in the Chemistry Department in 1960. By 1966, she had become a full professor, a position she held until her retirement in 1990.

“Hallie was a mentor to many people, and I was fortunate to be among those she influenced,” said Eleanor Siebert, interim provost and former chair of the Chemistry Department. “She had a natural curiosity about things and she loved to ‘putter’ in the lab exploring unanswered questions that failed to gain the attention of cutting-edge researchers.”

Cynthia Dias Selassie '74, professor of chemistry at Pomona College, recalls that in her sophomore year, she often passed by Bundy's labs and watched seniors working with great seriousness and enthusiasm. “Dr. Bundy would invite me in, chat with me, and prod me about my future plans,” she said. “She was a task master, but a wonderful teacher who left an indelible mark on many Mount students who had the good fortune to work under her aegis.”

Bundy is remembered as a very dedicated scientist whose field of interest was enzymes and proteins, a successful grant writer whose proposals brought funds to the College for scientific studies, and an author of many articles. She was also a stamp collector and an avid sports fan.

Contributions in Hallie Bundy’s memory may be sent to Institutional Advancement, Mount St. Mary's College, c/o Stephanie Cubba, 10 Chester Place, Los Angeles, CA, 90007.

College Sponsors Community Trick-or-Treat Event

The Mount hosted its annual trick-or-treat event for more than 5,000 residents living near the Doheny Campus on Halloween, including disabled children who attend Lanterman High School next door to the College and tots from MSMC’s Child Development Center.

The 16th annual Haunted Campus Safe and Fun Halloween featured more than 6,000 pounds of donated candy, costume contests for children and adults, dance contests, and spooky decorations in front of the 100-year-old Doheny Mansion and the other early 1900s-era mansions along Chester Place. The transformation to Mount St. “Scary's” College on the Doheny Campus is directed by students with support from Maria Lyons, Student Activities director, Doheny.

“This is a fun, safe place for children and their families to go where all they do is show up and we provide everything they need to have a nice evening,” Lyons said.
Legendary Figure in Anne Frank’s Life Writes to Weekend College Student

Weekend College student Courtney Lichterman always had a deep personal interest in the story of Anne Frank and Miep Gies, the woman who helped hide Anne and her family from the Nazis during World War II. When she got the assignment of a final paper for her class “The Roots of Anti-Semitism: From the Shoah to Antiquity,” she knew immediately that she wanted to write about the woman who had sheltered the Frank family.

What she didn’t know when she began her project was that she would receive a personal letter from the 96-year-old Gies, who lives just outside of Amsterdam with her family. Before World War II, Gies worked as an office assistant for Anne Frank’s father, Otto Frank.

In her letter to Lichterman, Gies explained that the peace of mind which came from helping the Frank family outweighed any doubts or fears she had of getting caught by the Nazis. “The presence and the gratitude of my friends was a permanent source of inspiration and brought me feelings of fulfillment,” Gies wrote.

“Miep Gies had an almost iconic status among my childhood friends and me,” Lichterman said. “Almost all of us were either Jewish or, as was true in my case, half-Jewish, and stories about the Holocaust were told and retold constantly in our homes and in school, occasionally by first-hand sources.”

Lichterman received Gies’ letter a few weeks too late to include in her report. But receiving it was a thrill nonetheless. “At the end was her signature, and it became very clear that this was no different than holding a letter from Martin Luther King or Ghandi. This was like holding history,” Lichterman said.

MSMC Supports Women’s Education Advertisement in New York Times

Mount St. Mary’s College was listed among 52 supporters of a second advertisement that ran in October in the New York Times highlighting the success of women’s education.

The ad, put together by the Women’s College Coalition, which counts MSMC as a member, advocates for stronger educational opportunities worldwide for women. It highlighted recent comments from First Lady Laura Bush and Sen. Hillary Clinton.
An Enchanted Evening

There was standing room only for the Alumnae Concert last fall, which filled the Pompeian Room on the Doheny Campus with classical and modern pieces spanning more than 300 years of musical history. Sponsored by the Music Department, the concert featured graduates: Nancy Arnold '75, Sister Celia Du Rea '99, Nancy Fierro, Silvia Rivera Hammond '95, and Kathy Dragon Henn '76. The audience also heard the harmonious voices of the Mount Chorus, conducted by Ed Archer.

“We are very proud of our graduates who continue to develop themselves and place their talents to the service of others,” said Sister Teresita Espinosa, chair of the Music Department.

Teaching Music in the Classroom Program

For the last 15 years, the Music Department has hosted a music education workshop as a way to reach out to elementary schools and high schools of Los Angeles and help them bring music into their classrooms. In November, over 30 teachers attended the “Music Making with Today’s Young: New Materials, New Approaches, New Connections” interactive workshop. Participants experienced music and dance from many continents and learned how to bring singing, playing, movement, improvising, creating, technology, and sound systems into the classroom. Presenters included Mount lecturer and founder-director of American Musicals, Inc., Beverly Craveiro. Sister Teresita Espinosa, Chair of the Music Department explained, “We firmly believe that music and the arts should be an integral part of general education for all students.” She said the arts help the individual to express the otherwise inexpressible. “We know throughout history that the arts have defined and deepened the human experience. No one who lacks basic knowledge of music and the arts can claim to be truly educated. I am deeply committed to helping the teachers, and they have been very successful and have expressed much gratitude for these workshops,” said Sister Teresita.
The Mount’s Newest Doctors

The first graduates of the Mount’s Doctor of Physical Therapy Degree Program received their degrees last October on the College’s Doheny Campus near downtown Los Angeles. “The goal of the Doctor of Physical Therapy Program is to graduate competent, compassionate, reflective generalist physical therapists prepared to practice in the current and future healthcare environment,” said Debbie Lowe, chair of the Physical Therapy Department. “The Program develops practitioners who possess a thorough understanding of the human being: structurally, functionally, psychosocially, and spiritually.” In 1987, the College established its Bachelor of Science in Physical Therapy Program, which in 1991 converted to a Master’s of Physical Therapy program. In 2001, the College developed the Doctor of Physical Therapy Program in response to a need for more extensive preparation in physical therapy. The first students enrolled in the doctoral program in 2002, and the College currently counts 60 students in the program.

Bravo Professor Alviani!

Henry Alviani ’76, assistant professor of music and director of choirs at Clarion University in Clarion, PA, dressed in a costume resplendent of Renaissance Italy when he performed in the Pittsburgh Opera’s presentation of Rigoletto last fall. “To be on stage and sing with opera stars of the quality that the Pittsburgh Opera engages is an absolutely incomparable experience,” said Alviani. This was his fourth performance with this company. Originally from Burbank, California, Alviani studied with Paul Salamunovich ’61 and taught in junior and senior high schools for 12 years. He has directed choral ensembles, taught voice in colleges in Texas and Wisconsin, and has seen several of his own choral compositions published.

WECAN Reception

Sandra Larsen, Sara Mena ’04, and Yadira Garcia ’02 enjoyed hors d’oeuvres at a reception hosted by the Weekend College Alumni Network (WECAN) before the Christmas Choral Concert in December. The program, presented by the Mount Singers, the Mount Chorus, and St. Monica High School Chamber Singers, featured traditional Christmas carols, spirituals, and Gregorian and Medieval music as well as modern holiday songs.

“The reception before the concert offers a wonderful opportunity to meet with former classmates and see what they have been doing for the past year,” said Yadira Garcia, a WECAN founding member.

CSJs Help Mount Students Balance Spirituality With Hectic Lives

Thirty-five Mount students participated in a four-day Busy Person’s Retreat in October hosted by The Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet on the Chalon and Doheny Campuses. About 40 sisters teamed up with students to help the students realize their relationships with God as they balance hectic work, family, and school schedules.
The Mount Welcomes Poets and Authors

One of America’s great living poets, Marvin Bell, visited the Chalon Campus in October in the José Drudis-Biada Art Gallery. Following a reading from his work, Bell took questions from the audience. He is the Poet Laureate of the state of Iowa, and taught at the esteemed Iowa Writers’ Workshop for three decades. He has produced more than 15 books of poetry, and has won numerous awards.

In September, Rueben Martinez, founder and chief executive officer of Libreria Martinez Books & Art Gallery and Libros Para Ninos children’s bookstores in Santa Ana and Lynwood, encouraged students to learn as much as they could and to embrace books.

“Learning is in. Reading is in. That’s what life is about: being prepared,” Martinez said during a talk at the Chalon Campus Little Theater. “If you are prepared, the doors open automatically for you.”

He also told students to persevere in their goals. “It’s about not giving up, under all conditions,” he said.

Mount Freshman Jumps In to Big City Politics

Mount freshman Crystal Arceo, 19, used everything she learned working on political campaigns since the eighth-grade in her own run for the Los Angeles City Council in November. She finished eighth out of 10 candidates competing to fill the 14th Council District seat vacated last year by L.A. Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa.

Crystal, a business major on the Doheny Campus, ranked as her priorities in office: establishing a city program to lower the dropout rates at area high schools, improving senior centers, cutting down on traffic congestion, and creating more opportunities for low-income residents to become homeowners. Crystal was by far the youngest candidate vying for the spot.

About 80,000 registered voters live in the 14th district, which includes parts of Mount Washington, Monterey Hills, Boyle Heights, and Eagle Rock.

Crystal started her career in politics when she was 14, helping her father on local political campaigns. She was class vice president at her elementary school, president and vice president of her class at Sacred Heart of Jesus Catholic High School in Lincoln Heights, and is genuinely interested in making the neighborhoods in the 14th district better.

“If you don’t see me win this election, you’ll see me in the next council election,” she said. “I’m serious about helping my community.”

When at school, she enjoys wearing jeans and being a regular student just like her classmates. “I really have to take advantage of all my time,” she said. “I love being at the Mount because I can just relax and be myself.”

But at night and on weekends when she attended campaign forums, she was strictly a candidate. She worried if her campaign staff would be able to help her raise enough money to get out mailers before the election. She met with public image consultants and picked out new suits to wear on the campaign trail.

On one Sunday in October, she attended Mass at six Catholic churches in the district, getting her name out to voters.

She even asked a couple of her father’s friends to help her with security, just in case.

Crystal went on camera numerous times for interviews with television news reporters to talk about the one issue getting her the most attention—her age. She said it’s sometimes hard to convince people they should vote for her. One woman who was backing a different candidate heckled Crystal at a candidates’ forum. The woman ripped up a flier one of Crystal’s volunteers had just handed out, and threw it back at Crystal.

Crystal said despite the negative aspects of politics, it’s important to stay focused on making positive changes. “I tell the voters that as much as they’re worried about their communities, I’m worried, too.”

Cecelia “Ceci” Schmahl Stratford ’64 is most content soaring 3,000 feet above Los Angeles, piloting her Piper Cherokee 180 from Whiteman Airport in the San Fernando Valley to destinations as varied as Arizona and Alaska.

She has been flying since 1976 when she obtained her pilot’s license, and has become a preeminent female pilot who now volunteers her time mentoring teenage girls who express an interest in piloting. In 2005, the International Organization of Women Pilots, also known as the Ninety-Nines, named her Woman Pilot of the Year for its Southwest section, which covers five western states.

Stratford has come a long way from the bachelor’s degree in nursing she earned at the Mount, when she entered the Peace Corps and lived in Guatemala for three years in the 1960s.

Her life experiences illustrate the beauty and complexity of a Mount education. She said her liberal arts foundation guided her toward her true passion of flight. What began as a hobby has turned into a lifestyle.

“I love flying for the excitement of doing something so challenging,” she said. “The Mount really prepared me with all the skills I would need to do this. I learned about beauty, adventure, and friendship at the Mount, and I also learned practical skills and about appreciating a challenge.

“To be a good pilot, you need to know how to study, and you have to be consistent and be really serious about the activity you are doing,” said Stratford, who lives in Simi Valley. She married once but her husband passed away in 1994. She currently lives in Simi Valley and is engaged to a man who shares her fascination and love of airplanes.

Like so many successful Mount graduates, Stratford’s life has taken unexpected turns. When she returned from Guatemala in the ’60s, she enrolled at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, and earned her master’s degree in rehabilitation facilities administration, intending to work with disabled children and adults. She then made her way back to Los Angeles and worked briefly with the Exceptional Children’s Foundation.

Her career path quickly shifted, and she was hired to work at Union Oil Co. in downtown Los Angeles as a telecommunications analyst. She stayed there for six years where she met a friend who encouraged her to fly by letting her use his airplane for training. By 1975, she was passionate about airplanes. She married a man who piloted Boeing B-17 bombers during World War II, and the couple loved flying around the country in their Cherokee, visiting airplane museums, and attending aviation events.

After Union Oil, Stratford worked for Union Bank of California as a systems analyst and later as a bank operations analyst. She retired from Union Bank about three years ago.

Since then, she has increased the amount of time she donates to spread her love of flying with children. At Whiteman Airport, she mentors students who are referred to her through a group called Aviation Explorers, which offers teenagers who express an interest in aviation opportunities to fly with local pilots and work toward their private pilot’s license.

Stratford is currently mentoring Genesis Rivas, a 16-year-old student from North Hollywood whose parents are immigrants from Central America. For Genesis, Stratford is a rare female role model who represents the possibilities of a career as a pilot. According to Stratford, women make up 6 percent of the pilot population.

“Around the world, it’s usually men who take the jobs flying airplanes,” said Genesis, whose goal is to fly commercial planes and piloted her first solo flight in December. “I’m really glad I have Ceci because she motivates me to pursue my goals, and I know that I can follow my dreams.”

Stratford, who started working with Aviation Explorers in 2003, says mentoring girls like Genesis is a natural fit at this point in her life. “I’ve always wanted to do more in-flight instructing. Helping people is a really big part of my life.”

Before she worked with Aviation Explorers, Stratford mentored women pilots in her chapter of the Ninety-Nines. She also has taken more than 300 children up in her airplane since 1997 through the Young Eagles program, which exposes children from ages 8 to 17 to aviation. Stratford volunteers her time giving talks about aviation at children’s museums, elementary schools, and to Girl Scout troops.

At MSMC, Stratford is a member of the Heritage Society, which includes alumnae and other friends who have made a bequest to the College.
Victoria Russell Kennedy ’68
Outstanding Alumna Award for Community Service

We all stumble, plod (or whatever other synonym we can find...) through life with indicators, clues, and tangible, visual guidelines that lead us. Let’s imagine for a minute our being blindfolded and everything going dark.

My close friend and former Mount roommate, Victoria Russell Kennedy (Vickie), discovered she was afflicted with retinitis pigmentosa (RP) while in her late 20s and raising her son in Hawaii. RP is a genetic eye disease which causes the gradual breakdown of the cones and rods in the retina, causing vision and color distortion, and “tunnel vision.” A personal anecdote I remember was in 1993 at the airport. Vickie and I were standing in line. Being nearsighted myself, I admitted not seeing clearly the boarding gate information. She tapped me lightly with her cane, saying, “You should have tunnel vision like me!”

The gathering process for the nomination of Vickie as Outstanding Alumna-Community Service (2005) was “enlightening,” to say the least. Having contacted several former and current colleagues and board members of both the Foundation Fighting Blindness (FFB) and Guide Dogs For the Blind (GDB), I was overwhelmed with the extent to which Vickie has contributed to the visually-impaired community at large. Her many accomplishments include the conception and execution of “Save Sight Sunday” symposiums at UC Berkeley’s Low Vision Clinic; creation/production of a cookbook to raise funds (Famous San Francisco Bay Area Chefs Cook with Vision); chairing the annual “Blind Wine Tasting & Auction – Support Our Canine Heroes” in Napa Valley, which has raised over $1 million and counting; and numerous other

More than 250 alums and guests returned to the Chalon Campus on October 22 to participate in Homecoming activities, which included: creative workshops; a Founders Day Mass celebrated by Rev. George O’Brien, MSMC Chaplain; and class reunions.

After a gala anniversary dinner in the Campus Center, and the surprise viewing of an 80th anniversary video, Outstanding Alumnae awards were presented to honorees Victoria Russell Kennedy ’68 for Community Service, and to Maria Gutierrez Ott ’70, ’78 M for Professional Achievement.

The evening concluded with a tribute to the Mount’s prestigious Education Department with recognition for graduates who serve as teachers throughout the world.

“Homecoming 2005 celebrated the College’s 80 years of values-based education, and its stellar graduates,” said Jeanne Ruiz, director of Alumnae Relations. “It was a wonderful day and we are already planning for next year. Save the date: October 14, 2006!”
community projects where Vickie speaks, always in the company of her precious “Freida,” whom she has had as a guide dog for almost six years. It is truly amazing to witness the complicity and unspoken faith and trust these people and their dogs have in one another. “Freida” is definitely the leader, and she and Vickie accomplish so much together. Vickie can navigate the BART underground system in San Francisco, and last summer they visited New Orleans and the French Quarter with its cobblestone streets...all a testament to the skills they both learned in San Rafael, CA at the GDB campus. Prior to losing her sight completely, she was blessed with the opportunity of seeing Freida’s beautiful caramel-colored eyes. Jim, her loving husband, has been her biggest cheerleader and is wonderful in planning all their frequent travels.

Prior to her position as first vice chair and member of the Executive and Long-Range Planning Committee for GDB, Vickie gave countless hours to the FFB. The former West Coast executive director gave a glowing nomination, quoting: “She is a woman of remarkable energy, enthusiasm and talent who has used these qualities to promote hope and enhance the lives of those with sight-stealing retinal degenerative diseases. Although she is blind, no one who has met her would ever consider her “handicapped.” She is perennially upbeat, and gives strength and courage not only to those who face adversity, but to the rest of us who take for granted the way we are able to perceive and navigate the world around us.”

Traveling with Vickie, one realizes that she “sees” no barriers, and her other senses are more attuned to her environment. The word “challenge” has been redefined by Vickie Kennedy and the thousands of other visually-impaired persons whose canine companions guide them through their lives. Let those of us who are not impaired be inspired by her “beacon of light.”

Maria Gutierrez Ott ’70, ’78M

Outstanding Alumna Award for Professional Achievement

My four years at the Mount are filled with fond, wonderful memories of my friends, my education and the beautiful setting at the Mount.

Recently, I became chair of the Latina Alumnae Network (LAN), an affiliate group of the Alumnae Association. When we held our first New Graduate Latina Luncheon in 2004, Maria Gutierrez Ott ’70, ’78M was our speaker. At that time, she was serving as deputy superintendent of instruction for the Los Angeles Unified School District (LAUSD). I was struck by her approachability and her calm demeanor. In her speech, she was very candid about her life, her career, and the struggles she confronted. That was when I realized that so much more lay in store for me, as a Latina, as a professional, and as a Mount alumna. Although she was speaking to the College’s recent graduates, I knew that many of us, young and old alumnae, were benefiting from the stories about her experiences.

She was born in Germany to a Mexican-American World War II soldier and a German mother, and was soon brought to East Los Angeles where she was raised. Her father’s family played a pivotal role in Maria’s life, teaching her Spanish and helping her become familiar with her Latino culture. Her mother taught her to speak German and made many efforts to blend with her father’s ethnic background, while retaining the cultural nuances of being German. “Mom would bring her chiles, but she’d also bring her apple strudel to our annual family picnics,” Maria said.

We reflected on where our notions of “service” originated from, and she told me about the challenge of learning to speak English after she had learned German and Spanish as a child. She described the personal struggles of her family’s experiences to make their way in the world and to try to fit in culturally, and how the trials helped her develop her call to service. She remembered dealing with negative comments about her identity as being “different,” but because of this adversity, she felt a need to help other children. The strong orientation toward service at the Mount and doing something that would make a difference in the community were aspects that influenced her.
Homecoming

After graduating in 1970, she began her career as a special education teacher and then, as a bilingual teacher. She returned to the Mount to earn her master’s degree in education in 1978. As her opportunities began to grow, she challenged herself to open doors that she never would have considered, and soon went on to earn her doctorate degree in educational policy, planning and administration from the University of Southern California in 1994.

She served in numerous positions for LAUSD, from teacher, to principal, to program coordinator to district administrator. She was also the superintendent for the Little Lake district in Santa Fe Springs. Her commitment to helping others again was clear as she improved student achievement, especially with the minority student population.

Maria described the past five years as a senior deputy superintendent for LAUSD as “the most interesting years of my career.”

She is currently serving as superintendent for the Rowland Unified School District. Balancing her life as a wife, mother, superintendent, and mentor, especially when she was completing her doctoral work, seemed to be impossible. But she also stressed the importance of finding common ground between family and career.

It seems that Maria Ott will never stop. Other than continuing to be a grandmother to her two grandchildren, she hopes to write and teach at the university-level one day.

I nominated Maria Ott for the Outstanding Alumna Award for Professional Achievement because to me, she epitomizes what success is: family, a fulfilling job, and a call to service. Although she is decorated with numerous accolades and awards, what appears important to her is the call to help others. “The balance is not always even,” she admits, “but keeping it is what makes it great.”

Her plate is always full, but Ott definitely remembers to keep some salsa on the side, and I am sure the apple strudel is also being balanced alongside with everything else!
